The Colorado Information Analysis Center (CIAC) serves as the focal point within the state for receiving, analyzing and sharing threat-related information among the private sector, local, tribal, and federal partners. The CIAC includes representatives from all levels of government representing a clearinghouse for threat information with a focus on protecting civil rights, civil liberties, and privacy concerns. The CIAC also provides situational awareness and a common operating picture and coordinated information collection, analysis, dissemination for Colorado Department of Public Safety (CDPS). The CIAC is committed to building and fostering an information-sharing network with and between the Faith Safety Network in an effort to identify patterns, trends and threats as they relate to houses of worship.

David A. Benke, Ph. D : Correlation vs. Causation

The number one purchase in grocery stores that is correlated to murder rates is ice cream sales. Does that mean that when I go to the store and buy a pint of Chunky Monkey that I will have an irresistible urge to kill someone? Nope. Not even if Rocky Road, not Chunky Monkey, is really my favorite. However, it does mean that hot weather...

United Surveillance & Alarm

“Soft Target” is a label nobody wants to claim, but 75 percent of our places of worship fall under that category.

A soft target refers to the lack of security a facility may have and the ease of which a crime can successfully be pulled off. For example, let’s say we have two identical buildings sitting next to each other, the building on the left has an alarm with a video security system watching over the property, while the building on the right has no signs of security at all...

Mike Spray Prodcut Review: Radio Communications & Equipment

Communication is important, right? Very few folks will disagree with the concept, but the definitions and methods are always up for discussion! We can use phones, email, texts, or post-it notes – we can even shout across a crowded room – but regardless of the medium, we try to transfer information between people. Were we successful? That depends...
